Revision3

Revision3 is an independent internet television network that creates and distributes video content on a variety of topics, such as tech news, gaming, and entertainment—making them a perfect partner for Google TV.

After its launch, not only did the app on Google TV increase the amount of people they reach, but Revision3's research showed that three times as many Google TV viewers watch content for 30 minutes or more compared to online viewers.

Revision3 is excited about these results. And for the next iteration of the app, they plan to allow viewers to log into their Revision3 account and enable features such as session shifting and favoriting playlists.

Video - DramaFever

DRAMA FEVER DramaFever launched in August 2009 to make popular Asian TV shows and movies available on demand around the world. The high quality of DramaFever's streaming videos made it a natural choice to bring their service to TV.

After seeing high traffic and engagement through the Google TV Chrome browser, the DramaFever team decided to take the next step by creating an Android app to provide a richer, more integrated experience for the Google TV audience. DramaFever also improved the on demand video experience through localization, notifications, and the ability to update automatically.

Second Screen - Peel

Peel for Google TV delivers a personalized TV experience, and allows passionate TV lovers everywhere to discover, watch, and share content across multiple sources like Netflix, TV, DVR and online content.

Peel utilized the Google TV Android platform's rich set of APIs and mature developer community to innovate and release new features faster than previously possible.

Peel plans to work with new content partners and more mobile devices for richer engagement experiences under Google TV's cohesive platform.
